McCabe will find balance

As the proud father of grandfather of five, I often wonder what the world will be like as they grow up and set out on their own. Particularly, I wonder if Delaware and Sussex County will be conducive for them to have a good quality of life, and will they be able to maintain the same standard of living that I have come to enjoy here in Sussex County?

In my view, Sussex County is being overdeveloped and is in continued danger of losing too much farmland and open spaces, and the small-town living that I and so many of my neighbors have come to enjoy seems to be in danger of disappearing. Yet, I realize there is need for careful development to create the jobs we need for our own sustainability, as well as that of our children and grandchildren. This is a delicate balance, but I think Russ McCabe can find that balance.

I want to see Russ become our next state representative. Sussex County, specifically this district, being his family home for over 300 years, he being a professional historian, a lifelong public servant and a proud father of two fine sons, Russ can see the big picture that others may not. He has articulated over and over again the need for maintaining open spaces and speaking up for farmers' interests. At the same time, he is strong in support of creating jobs and improving our local economy while maintaining this critical balance.

In short, I feel confident that my grandkids — and yours — will be advantaged not only this year, but years from now, if we elect Russ McCabe as our representative for the 36th District.
