

News Journal letter to the editor, 10/27/10

Following the announcement of Rep. George Carey's retirement, I received many calls from friends and neighbors, Democrats and Republicans alike, encouraging me to run. After considerable soul-searching, I concluded that I have a debt to repay for my many blessings, and giving back isn't just a choice but my duty and responsibility.

Simply put, I am running for 36th District Representative to make Sussex County and Delaware a better place. This is no time for political gamesmanship or business as usual. It's time to vigorously address the real problems that confront us.

I believe we should take all measures necessary to improve our economy, create jobs and support our farmers. Because good jobs depend on good preparation, I will push for improved educational and training opportunities for young people and for those changing careers later in life.

I will insist that infrastructure keeps pace with development, while also preserving open spaces. Real challenges require real ideas, and I am committed to saving tax dollars by modifying the state's purchasing rules and adopting an action plan to reduce the size and cost of government.

To make progress, we must avoid the polarizing effects of partisanship and reach "across the aisle" to get things done. I am a firm believer in honest and open governance, with Delawareans having full knowledge of and open access to their own state government. Now more than ever, our district needs a representative to serve as an active advocate -- someone who will stand up and speak out for us.

I believe my proven record of service and deep knowledge of Delawareans and their government will be valuable assets for the residents of the 36th District, and I am ready to hit the ground running on Day 1.
